

The Charm of Mayavati Ashrama

Language: English Pages: 332 (37 Color and 55 B/W Illustrations) About The Book I was never a missionary, nor ever would be one—my place is in the Himalayas. I am longing for a flight to the Himalayas. And then I will buy a little place in the Himalayas—a whole hill—about say, six thousand feet high with a grand view of the eternal snows. There must be springs and a tiny lake. Cedars—the Himalayan cedar forests—and flowers, flowers everywhere. I will have a little cottage; in the middle, my vegetable gardens, which I will work myself and and my books and see the face of man only once in a great while. And the world may go to ruin round about my ears, I would not care. Today I walked over the snow uphill about a mile, seeing Mrs. Seviens lands; she has made beautiful roads all over. Plenty of gardens, fields, orchards, and large forests, all in her land. The living houses are so simple, so clean, and so pretty, and above all so suited for the purpose. The snow is lying all round six inches deep, the sun is bright and glorious, and now in the middle of the day we are sitting outside, reading. And the snow all about us! The winter here is very mild in spite of the snow. The air is dry and balmy, and the water beyond all praise. on the heights of the Himalayas I have a place where I am determined nothing shall enter except pure truth. There I want to work out this idea. The purpose is to train seekers of truth and to bring up children without fear and without superstition. They shall not hear about Christs and Buddhas and Shivas and Vishnus—none of these. They shall learn, from the start, to stand upon their own feet. They shall learn from their childhood that God is the spirit and should be worshipped in spirit and in truth. Everyone must be l
