

Surrender In St. Thomas

Fresh out of college, Janet Mahoney headed for New York to carve out a career in advertising. At Nichols and Gibson Advertising handsome Vice-President for sales, Kevin Donaldson, interceded on her behalf to get a job in the company. Before long the two were an item, at least from his point of view. He pressured her to move in with him for the good times, not marriage. She rejected him; she was still a virgin. Her boss, Scotty Anderson, sent her to St. Thomas to present a multi-million dollar project to the CEO of Palermo Industries. Wasn't that Kevin's responsibility? Scotty said she put the project together; it was her job to sell it. She recalled elderly Mr. Palermo, the nice old gentleman she had worked with on the project. What Scotty neglected to tell her was she'd be working with handsome Jeff Palermo, the son and new CEO of Palermo Industries. Both were in for a surprise, Jeff expecting older Scotty Anderson, and Janet looking to meet elderly Mr. Palermo, as both waited outside the entrance to the restaurant where they were supposed to meet. Both fidgeted, waiting for their contact. Jeff grumbled aloud about the lateness of the Nichols and Gibson representative. Janet heard, gulped, and said she was the representative. Laughter followed; both had been taken. Janet soon found life in the tropics was much different after meeting with young Mister Palermo.
