

Benjamin and Frederica

This is a love story between an American male pursuing a Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology and an English woman who is the chief librarian of University College Medical School on the campus of the University of London back in the nineteen fifties. Both are around thirty years old and are extremely shy and cautious towards each other until they discover after a lengthy courtship that Frederica is a superior classical violinist hiding from her parents as a librarian and Benjamin is a superior singer of folk songs and love ballads to his own accompaniment on the guitar. They fall deeply in love after appreciating the tremendous musical talent of each other and make love the same evening for the first time at his Hampstead apartment. She is a family heiress to a huge financial fortune, and he is a dedicated psychotherapist with his own private practice, but her mother thinks that Benjamin has fallen in love with Frederica only because he wants her money. Frederica falls ill with malaria and enters a coma in a hospital in Mombay, India while on holiday. This brings her mother and Benjamin to her bed side and forces them both to encounter in emotional depth one another for the first time when he tells her why she has been such a failure as a mother. She realizes what an intuitively gifted man he is and her contempt for him slowly softens and he similarly softens in his contempt for her the more receptive she becomes to the wisdom of his observations about her. Benjamin and Frederica happily marry, thereafter do joint concert tours together, and during their later years move into a magnificent castle on a huge property near St. Albans after her parents have passed away.
