

The book is a true story. It is the story of an inexplicable experience. It has been described as a spiritual experience, which gradually undid one mans whole perception of reality. The book does not explain what happens when the perceptions are no longer valid, because this can only be experienced. When he could no longer sustain his perception of the sun, the moon and the stars and everything that was constrained within a generic definition, the perceiver was forced to question the truth of his own identity. The book is a message to those who are beginning to question who and what they are. The undoing of your perception of your perceived reality, inevitably leads to the question, who and what am I ? This book is not fiction, it is one mans testimony.
