

The Quicksands of Time

Wesley Stevenson wakes up on his twenty-first birthday to discover that he is thirty-one years old. The following night he ages an additional ten years. Confused and skeptical doctors can provide no answers and the horrors continue as each subsequent morning brings another nightmare. The fillings in his teeth and his tattoos vanish. Mysterious, painful burns appear. Clothing disappears without a trace. He awakens bleeding profusely from a gunshot wound, even though he is alone in a sealed room. Then comes the unexplainable death of his neighbor a demise so hideous that it drives a witness to insanity. When Wes sees a sleazy tabloid newspaper story about a series of bizarre deaths in his neighborhood, he contacts the writer in a desperate effort to shed some light on his own personal nightmare. Tough, jaded New York reporter, Catherine Chilton, senses the story of a lifetime bizarre facts that read like the most sensationalized fiction. Joining the investigation, it isn't long before she, too, is a victim of unexplainable horrors. Careening out of control on this roller-coaster from hell, the two strangers grow unexpectedly close. In spite of the mind-numbing terror or perhaps because of it they find themselves falling in love. Drawing strength from one another, the couple races to solve the deadly puzzle, before it's too late for either of them.
